The election of Jair Bolsonaro in Brazil marks an extremely serious point in the rise of the global far-right.

It came just a day after the shocking antisemitic attack on the Tree of Life Synagogue, Pittsburgh in the United States, where 11 people were killed.

Bolsonaro is notorious for his attacks on women, black and LGBT+ people. He also declared that leftists will have to “go overseas, or they go to jail,” and he described refugees as “the scum of the earth.”

The alt right and the far right are increasingly linking up internationally, and offering each other support.

Britain is not immune from this. A violent, far right street movement has recently emerged here, mobilising the biggest numbers in decades.

It is receiving political and financial support from Donald Trump’s former chief of staff Steve Bannon and far right figures from across Europe.

The impact of neoliberalism and austerity on our communities has boosted the growth of the far right. Racism and fascism are a threat to us all.

But we are the majority and we can drive back this movement. All those opposed to the far right and fascism, must unite against them.

That is why we are urging the biggest, broadest possible turnout at the unity demonstration against racism and fascism on Saturday 17 November.
